ABSTRACT:

Voting is an important aspect for democratic countries. Elections decide which candidate is capable and also decides the future of that country therefore elections should be as transparent as possible. But the existing voting system has some flaws like time consuming process because voter has to wait in queue for casting their vote . Due to this, inclination of voters is decreasing towards voting and voting percentage decreases. To overcome these issues and to improve the existing voting system we are designing online voting system using android application which will give better system security and vote casting become less time consuming process and it will provide better results. Voter can cast vote remotely from anywhere in the country with the help of an android device and voting application called "VOTELINE" on his device. Voters must have internet connection on their android device to cast vote from remote place. Android application will be compatible with almost all the android devices so that every voter should get benefit of online voting system. voters can come to know about the candidates information who are appearing for the election and through their information the voter can gain knowledge to vote for better candidate. Results of election will be displayed on individual voter's device while casting the vote.

Kalki Subramaniam

Born:Pollachi,Tamil Nadu, India;Nationality:Indian;Occupation:Activist, actor, and artist; Years active:Since 2005

From 2005, Kalki has campaigned for transgender rights in India. She is known for her innovative activism using technology, art, films, and literature as tools to voice for transgender empowerment. She was one of India's well-known campaigners behind the Supreme Court of India's judgment legalizing transgender identity. In 2009 when a popular matrimonial website rejected the matrimonial listing of a transgender woman, she took it as a challenge and launched India's first matrimonial website for transgender people. The project was later closed due to lack of financial support. She has created more than 12 documentary films on LGBT rights and has also appeared in international documentary films. In 2010, she trained many underprivileged transgender women in community journalism and encouraged them to make short documentary films telling their own stories. When she lived in Auroville,

;Nationality:Indian;Occupation:activist;Known for:5th Pillar

Vijay Anand is an anti-corruption activist from Coimbatore in Tamil Nadu, India. Anand formed the 5th Pillar organization whose goal is to fight corruption in Indian politics by fielding candidates who stand against corruption. Anand formed the 5th Pillar organization in 2006 to fight against corruption in Indian politics. The organization's goal is to field candidates for the Parliament of India that take a stance against government corruption. The organization also plans to reach out to the segment of the population who abstain from voting due to the perceived lack of credible candidates. 5th Pillar is a group of like-minded individuals and we will keep trying to achieve our goals even if we don't get elected as legislators. For him, election is just one more way to take his crusade forward. Ask Vijay what his chances are of winning and he candidly admits that he may not win. Winning
